

The Death Penalty in Harris County

- Harris County prosecutors have secured death sentences for 298 people since 1974, more than any other county..
- In the 1990s, Harris County juries routinely sent as many as 15 people to death row each year.
- While Harris County remains the top sentencing county in Texas, jurors there have imposed just four new death sentences since 2018. Most recently, a jury sentenced Robert Solis to death in October 2022. He represented himself at trial and did not call any witnesses during the punishment phase.
- There are 71 people on death row who were convicted in Harris County; this constitutes more than one-third of Texas's current death row population.
- 21 of the last 22 defendants sentenced to death in Harris County are people of color (16 are Black, four are Hispanic, and one identifies with another non-white race/ethnicity).
- In the 1990s, the Harris County District Attorney's Office was three times more likely to seek the death penalty against Black defendants than similarly situated white defendants.
- Harris County accounts for 131 executions since 1982, more than any state in the country except Texas and twice as many as any other county.
- Since 2018, 27 individuals on death row have been resentenced or died in prison; more than 40% of these cases came from Harris County.
- Of the 16 death row exonerees in Texas, four were convicted in Harris County. In 2019, Alfred Dewayne Brown was declared "actually innocent" of the crime for which he spent a decade on death row; he was released in 2015 after charges against him were dropped. Prosecutors withheld important phone records that corroborated his alibi.
- According to the Houston Area Survey for 2020, conducted by the Kinder Institute for Urban Research at Rice University, only 20 percent of Houstonians think the death penalty, rather than life imprisonment, is the most appropriate punishment for murder. 01/01/2023
